DRY BENEFICT

This process is carried out at our plant located in the city of EL Alto - La Paz, Bolivia. At this plant, the work of storing, threshing, manually selecting, packaging, and exporting the organic coffee we produce is carried out.

PROCEEDINGS

WASHING PROCESS

The washing process starts with the pulping stage, where the mucilage is removed through fermentation. This can be achieved using tanks or channels for washing, which allow for the separation of good beans, empty beans, and other impurities. Afterwards, the beans are dried to obtain the desired physical quality.

HONEY PROCESS

The coffee fruits are pulped and then dried with the mucilage still attached to the bean. The classification before pulping and drying are the most important stages, as the final quality of the product depends on them. If the process is done properly, sweet and fruity sensory attributes can be presented while maintaining the level of acidity.

NATURAL PROCESS

This method is based on the dehydration of the coffee fruit, without removing its pulp or mucilage until the product reaches a moisture content of 11-12%. It generates a slower drying process, with greater absorption and concentration of sugars in the bean. Therefore, it results in a greater intensity of sensory characteristics such as body, sweetness, aroma, and acidity.
